The country publisher is the most charitable creature in existence. He labors seven days and as many nights in the week to get out a paper for his fellow mortals to read. He puts himself up as a money lender, and loans each of his subscribers from one to five dollars, without interest, and when the collector comes along and tries to gather in some of these hard earned dollars there are some of those borrowers who will abuse him and tell him to "stop that darned paper" and beat him out of his pay. Such are the pleasures of the newspaper man, but justice will some time overtake this class of dead beats, and there is some satisfaction in the thought that the publisher will occupy a high seat in the day of judgment and watch the grease ooze from the delinquents' bones.—Vassar Times.

Frank Whipple told a good story at the Republican meeting held in Port Huron Tuesday night. "An old farmer sold his wool at Yale, receiving nine cents a pound for the same. As he threw his check down on the bank counter, he said: 'The Democrats promised us free wool if we would elect Cleveland President. P—me if they haven't come within nine cents of it.'"

The post office department has advertised for sealed proposals for the letting of the star route mail contracts for the state of Michigan for the four years beginning July 1, 1895. The advertisement of the routes, together with details and elaborate specifications, were issued Sept. 25. The figures show a very large increase in the number of routes for which proposals were solicited four years ago, the postal service in the state having enjoyed a healthy growth in the meantime.

ALMONT, Oct. 6.—The worst fire in the history of the village of Almont broke out about 11:30 Friday night, and before it was extinguished six buildings were entirely consumed, and several others slightly damaged. The fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin, and started in the rear of Ed. Gould's saloon, but soon spread to Joseph Simmond's carriage factory, and a blacksmith shop in the rear and later to a house owned by Ralph D. Harris and a vacant store owned by Ed. Gould, all of which were totally destroyed. It was only by the hardest possible kind of work with the appliances at hand that the bank building was saved, while several others caught fire but were extinguished. The loss is hard to estimate at present, but will probably reach nearly $10,000, while there is but little of any insurance.
